Dear Secretary Mike Johanns:

What a job you have been chosen to carry out. Secretary of Agriculture...Glad you come from a Dairy Farm and know what farming is about and you know that it is a business that needs a bottom line to pay the bills and support the family too.

At the Kansas State fair you said that INCREASING FEDERAL DEFICITS WITH OUR government, the budget is tight.

What about the TAX BREAKS the President has given to the wealthy??? Just how much money do they need to be happy????

What about the TAX BREAKS the President has given to the OIL and GAS INDUSTRY???? Heard where the oil companies had made 40 billion dollars just the first quarter...Seems like they should be doing fine.

This President has signed a bill to subsidy PHARMACEUTICAL DRUG COMPANIES...but, he has not put a cap on PRESCRIPTION DRUGS...He found money in the budget to make them happy....

This President wants to REPEAL the Estate Tax. This will certainly protect the WEALTHY AND POWERFUL....I heard a man talking on C-Span this week and he said he did not want to have Estate Tax repealed..he and wife worth over 1 1/2 million dollars...they don't need this money and they don't want it... A man talked of he and wife having an income of $700 to $800 thousand dollars per year and they don't need a TAX BREAK. They don't want it...

The FARM SUBSIDY FORMULA I think needs to be changed...Corporations with three or four members should not be getting the same sum per individual off the same piece of land...ONE SUM AND THEY CAN DIVIDE IT AMONGST THE CORPORATION MEMBERS.....ONE LANDLORD AND ONE TENANT...AND, SHUT OFF THIS DOUBLE CROPPING.....COMPOUNDS OUR SURPLUS..AND THEY CAN COLLECT DISASTER PAYMENTS IF CROP DOES NOT MATURE TO HARVEST.

Have you ever looked at the list of recipients of Subsidy checks???? Big Corporations with diverse businesses:as: CHEVRON, JOHN HANCOCK LIFE INSURANCE..CATERPILLAR...CARGILL (a Fortune 500) member.... Sam Donaldson ABC news caster...David Rockefeller...Ted Turner... Sunkist...THEIR PRIORITY INCOME DOES NOT COME OFF THE FARM...IT'S a diversification and sometimes a hobby.....

Congress voted in CAFTA....NAFTA....supposed to mean more agriculture exports....Times back when agriculture products were our balance of trade...today we have a HUGE TRADE INBALANCE.....

Middle Class farmers are trying to hang on..I can't imagine the ACCOUNT RECEIVABLE ACCOUNTS...at this moment for Fertilizer and fuel...About time to plant wheat..and fall harvest going onPrice of fuel eating away at their bottom line.

FOOD, FUEL, AND FIBER used to be the basis of our economy at one time. TODAY'S GOVERNMENT DIVIDED BETWEEN THE POWERFUL AND POWERLESS.... PRODUCERS OF AGRICULTURE ARE THE POWERLESS....A shame....

Looking to you to do something responsible with 2007 farm bill...

Thank you - Mel and Miller - Kansas

Farmers voice concerns

Ag Secretary Johanns plans to submit his own draft of farm bill

Justin Lupfer wants to farm and ranch someday—but it's getting more difficult for kids to come back into farming and ranching, he told Secretary of Agriculture Mike Johanns on Monday.

His father, Bob, works part time as a teacher at Hangston High School to help supplement the farm income. His mother also has a job.

And Hanston — in the western Kansas county of Hodgeman, will lose its school next year — a victim of a declining rural economy.

"I'm just a kid, you know, and I might not know a whole lot, but I know the world can not live without agriculture," Lupfer said during the Johanns' farm bill listening tour at the Kansas State Fair.

The high school senior was one of several who gave Johanns a earful during the forum Monday on what farmers think should be included in the next farm bill. Congress will begin writing the 2007 farm bill next year, and Johanns said he plans to submit his own draft to legislators.

But the agriculture secretary who hails from Nebraska warned farmers that the budget situation was tight in Washington — especially with an increasing federal deficit.

"The fact remains we have to deal with the federal deficit," he told farmers at the end of the three-hour forum. "It's not good for agriculture, it's not good for farmers and ranchers."

Energy costs were the No. 1 issue for many who testified that morning.

Kansas Farm Bureau President Steve Baucus said another serious ammonia had risen from $200 a ton a few months ago to more than $500 a ton.

Even when the last farm bill was being discussed.

"The Congress has become even more urban," he said. "There is a lot less interest in farmers."

Opening more markets is one key to economic relief, Johanns said. Currently 95 percent of the world's population lives outside the United States, but only about a third of U.S. commodities reach the global marketplace.

"We already produce more than we consume," Johanns said of the domestic market.

In addition, some farmers said they wanted a farm bill with more payments to farmers who conserve the land, a cap on the amount farmers receive for subsidies and provide more money for research, including Kansas' wheat program.

Jim Ramirez, former Arkansas

City mayor, said the USDA Rural Development helped transform a "prehistoric dinosaur" of a building in town to a "really nice" one - asking that similar programs that help rural communities not be cut from farm bill spending.

Young farmers were one of the top focuses.

"I will know we have succeeded in developing farm policy, trade policy and developing competition from who farmers buy from and who farmers sell to once I see the results that are this," Moran said. "When sons and daughters are returning home to the Kansas farm, then we'll know we've done something right."

Kansas Agriculture Secretary Adrian Polansky's 28-year-old son is trying to make a living on the family Republic County farm. Polansky said the new farm bill should provide a tax benefit to farmers to sell their operations young farmers and enhance USDA's beginning farmer finance program.

Polansky said he didn't agree with some farmers' comments that the farm bill safety net discouraged young people from entering farming, saying a decrease in the safety net would result in lower farm income and lower farmland values.

Barton County farmer Keith Miller said his nephew started farming with him two months ago. He wants to be a farmer.

Miller asked him why, because there isn't any profit on the farm, and the only profit Miller has pocketed comes from government payments.

His nephew, however, is optimistic.

"He says he wants the way of life," Miller said. "I hope this new farm bill will put some profit back into our operations."
